How to use this workbook

The first square in every row is printed faintly. Trace it, then write the character yourself in the squares that follow. Tracing teaches your hand the shape; writing from memory is what makes it stick.

1	Read the category word list. Say each word aloud — the audio for every word is free on willychina.com.
2	Work through the tracing rows. One category per sitting is plenty.
3	Come back a day later and write the characters without tracing first.
4	Tick a word off in the list only once you can write it from memory.

The cross lines in each square are guides, not rules — they show you where the character's weight should sit.

Stroke order matters. Every character has a set sequence, and writing it in the right order is what makes your handwriting legible and fast. The numbered squares above each practice row show that sequence — the new stroke is in red.
